

The Inman River Walk

Length – 8km Return Approximately

Type – Linear with a Loop

Terrain - Easy

The Inman River Walk starts at Barker Reserve (Corner of Bay and George Main Rd). The walk follows the river, known to the Aboriginal people as “Moo-oola” and “Moogoora”. Start the walk by going under the bridge and following the Sports Oval around. Go under the next bridge and walk through the reserve known as Bruce Reserve). Step over the fence rails and follow the river along through two gates and around.

Along the way you'll see the remnants of the old bridge and where a bushfire went through in 1983. The wide-open land to the left is where the new TAFE is going to be. Keep walking along the path until you come to where the track splits into two. To the right is a bridge, follow the track straight not over the bridge.

This takes you to a quite, peaceful area. As you walk there is a bird hide. Sit a moment, listen and watch the birdlife around you. When ready walk on. You will eventually come back to where the bridge is.

Walk across the bridge and walk through the gate. To the left is where you might see the Clydesdales that pull the horse drawn tram across to Granite Island. Now your on Henderson Road walk to your left (North) and follow the road, past the swamplands of the Inman River. This leads you to the Victor Harbor Cemetery. This is the end. To return retrace your steps. When you cross the bridge instead of going right back past the bird hide you can go up and to your left.
